FROM THE PORTSMOUTH ORACLE.

ON THE CULTIVATION OF VINES.

The cultivation of Pumpkins, Squashes, Melons, and Cucumbers, is yet very imperfect. People will plant and hoe as their grandfathers and neighbors have done before them, not trusting to their own judgement, or being willing to risk the least by way of richer qualities. The best kind is of an oval shape, soft shelled, thick meated, fine grained, and are most convenient and much the best for house use. They are planted a. mong corn, and if the corn be cultivated right, (the ground rich and nearly level, and always loose and free from weeds) they will produce very well; but it must be expected they will exhaust the ground in some mea-Parsuant to a Deed of Trust, Executed to sure, and lessen the crop of corn. If they ne subscriber by Moses Wilson, jr. on the 3d | are planted free from other vegetables, they vines cultivated in this manner in a favorable season will run a great distance, not less than 30 to 50 feet; they will root at every joint or leaf, and will shoot for vine as often, and will receive so much nourishment rooted, with a growing pumpkin, be cut off near the stump, it will not appear to be materially affected; not even to silt in a hot day. Be sure to take off the two or three first crops when about as large as a goose egg; in taking off the first it will cause immediately a number in stead, and the second time in proportion, and may be continued until danger of being too late for a growth or to ripen. This mode of cultivating pumpkins may be considered extravagant as o the ground: but if I was on a wager to get the greatest crop from four rods, I would have but one, and that in the centre. If pumpkins are planted as thick as Indian corn, on the best and highest cultivated ground, they will produce but a small crop, and those of a small size. The roots extenda great distance in a horizontal direction if there are no obstructions. They keep some distance before the vine. I have cultivated a large kind, much famed for their size in particular, but with little success; they would produce but few, and those green and

> This method of the culture of pumpkins will apply to squashes with little exception. There are many of the same kind of summer squash, &c. that will not occupy so much ground. Many kinds will not root at the joint as they run. Never have but one vine to a hill, large or small. Never scrape the dirt about the stump, but have it all level and always loose, especially on top. The ground will retain its moisture thereby, and the vines never will suffer for rain in the driest seasons. Do not forget to pluck off the first two or three crops when small, as observed. In this way you may obtain almost any quantity, and those of a full size. from a vine. - Sandy loam is hest, suited to squashes, but will do well on any rich warm > Water melons require much heat; you connot find too warm ground for them. Sandy loam suits them best. The best manure for them is hogs dung and dirt worked together by hogs. It should be spread and plowed in and well pulverized and mixed with the earth, and a good depth. Plant the hills a good distance, not less than ten feet: let the ground, when the seed is covered, be a little lower than a level with the surface, and when done hocing leaving it level, and always keep the top of the ground loose and free from weeds. The top of the ground will be dry and will attract the heat of the sun, and will cause the earth underneath to be much warmer; the dry loose dirt is a covering, and a preventative to the eva-poration of the moisture underneath. The vines will flourish much better without rain than with it, unless light and warm. A heavy rain will check a vine that is growing from 6 to 9 inches a day, to an eighth of an

They should be at least six feet distant, one in the hill; put no manure in the holes of any vines, as it is too powerful, and will cause them to wilt and die, and the worms to breed, which get into the stock and root, and often destroy them. REMEDY FOR CANCERS.

From the Middlesex (Mass.) Gazette. DRACUT, APRIL 9, 1817.

SIR-Considering it a duty incumbent up on each individual of Society to do all in his power to promote the health, prosperity, supreme chief of the republic. and happiness, of all his fellow-citizens, I will state to you the commencement, progress, and cure, of a most distressing disease, which has occurred in my family. If you think it worthy of a place in your paper, I have no objection to its being made public; and it will afford me great consolation to learn that the application which wrought the cure, has had the same efficacious operation upon others in similar circumstances.

About seven years since, my wife was seized with a cancer on her ankle, which increased with considerable rapidity, and was attended with pain; it continued sorely to affect her for nine months, during which time no pains were spared to obtain the best advice from those well versed in medicine and surgery. It was twice attempted to eradicate it by the application of vegetable causticks; and many other applications were unsuccessfully made.-The limb became weak, and at times much swollen. She had in a measure lost her appetite, and her whole system seemed on the decline. The sore was deep and broad. In this situation we commenced the application which produced the cure.-The principal ingredient is an evergreen plant, which is to be found in all the northern states, in wood-

This led to the conclusion, that if any had actually fallen into the holes, they either crawled out again, or (what is much more probable) perforated the earth, burrowed in it, and thus made their escape. I now bethought me of a plan which promised better things, and accordingly went to an apothecary's shop and purchased a gross of phials. These I sunk into the earth near and around my, plants so that their mouths, which were uncorked, were just upon a level with the surface of the earth, hours, some five or six, and two or three livwithout taking a single worm. Still-unwilling to be thus foiled, and at the same time a little ambitious to be useful to my fellow citizens, I atlast, after several days intense cogitation, fell upon a method which succeeded to admiration, and which has rewarded my labours beyond my most sanguine expectations. My method is this: I rise early every morning and visit my plants with an old case knife in my hand. I dig and stir the earth about the plant, where I am almost certain of finding one or more of the enemy concealed. As soon as he is thus ! brought above ground, I seize him with my left hand near the head, and press him gently between my fore finger & thumb-whereupon he is sure to open his mouth, into which I thrust a small quantity of arsenic, and the marauder becomes convuised, and dies almost instantaneously.

I am firmly persuaded that if this method is attended to, with care and diligence, our range, ended a dispute with pistols; and it sands of these vermin every season.

Hopewell Carding Machines. THE subscriber informs his friends and the public generally, that he has two Carding Machines and one Picker, all in complete order for the reception of WOOL. From the experience he has had in the business, he flatters himself to be able to give general satisfaction to all who may please to favor him with their custom. All persons sending wool shall be attended to immediately. Distant customers can have their wool manufactured into rolls in time to take with them on their return home. From 100 to 150 pounds of wool can be carded during the day and night. Persons wishing their wool greased at the machine, must send one pound of clean grease to every eight or ten pounds of wool:

When man from labor, toil and care, Returns t enjoy his home and fire, In winter evening's cold-Lord! how provoking then it is, To see a wife with woeful phiz, And hear her storm and scold

Let creditors dun, pull and haul, And sheriffs "greeting" loudly call-Or constables insult! If I clude this worst of plagues, By dint of stratagem or LEGS-I've reason to exult.

Let one endure a life's campaign, With toil and wounds 'mong 'heaps of slain And on half rations fare-Where cannons roar and bullets fly, Where patriots fall and heroes die, And death and famine stare.

Let me in winter roam the street, In rags, and beg the bread I eat, Half naked and half froze— Or in some smoky hovel dwell—Alone and friendless, sick or well, To 'scape this worst of woes,

Let rheumatism rack my frame, Hard thumps and bruises make me lame, Or smite me sore with biles-But save me Hymen, while I've breath, From that more dreaded, faith, than death, From-from a scouping wife!

FROM A PARIS PAPER.

Ever since moralists existed, they have written against public manners. Ours are certainly not those of the golden age, but it is some consolation to reflect that our neighbors are no better than ourselves. For instance, *London is generally allowed to be the terrestrial paradise of husbands: English wives are regarded as models of tenderness and fidelity. The following calculation which we extract from an English paper, is not a little curious.

State of Marriages in London in 1816. Runaway wives, - - - - 1,132 Runaway husbands, - - - - - 2,348 Married persons legally divorced 4,175 Living in open warefare, - - 17,345 Living in private misunderstand-Motually indifferent, - - -Regarded as happy, - - - - 3,175

This is a new kind of statistics. We are assured that one of our first moralists is engaged in drawing out a similar account of the city of Paris. It will be curious to secwhich country may claim the advantage of the matrimonial balance.

The New-York National Advocate observes, that the following article is "genuine, and direct from the continent of Eu-

Specimen of the latest Literature of France.

MPROVEMENT IN THE HEBREW LANGUAGE A highly interesting publication has just been completed in France, which will serve to throw the greatest light on modern learning. Its title page is,

" The Hebrew language restored, and the true sense of its words recovered and ascertained, by their radical analysis," &c. by Mr. Faore d'Olivet-2 vols. 4to. Paris,

In the first part of the work of this celebrated writer are found-1st. An introduction to the origin of speech, to the study of the languages leading to it, and to the views of the author in pursuing his plan. 2d. A Hebrew grammar, grounded on new principles, and a mode subservient to the study of all languages. 3d. A series of Hebrew roots, considered in a new light, and intended to facilitate the understanding both of this language and the science of etymology. The second part opens with a preliminary discource, and a translation, in French, of the principles established in the grammar We shall here give a short account of the motives which determined Mr. d'Olivet to and the rules of this court, and it appearing | prosecute the execution of this important to the satisfaction of the court that they are | work. All learned men, who had examinnot inhabitants of this Commonwealth; on | ed the Hebrew language, and endeavored motion of the complainant, by his counsel: to understand its genius, were persuaded, It is ordered that the said defendants do ap setting aside their various countries and repear here on the fourth Monday in July next, ligions, that it had been lost for a long time, and answer the bill of the complainant, the words made use of in the grammar and dictionaries with which it is learned being fendant James S. Lane do not pay, convey grounded on erroneous principles. Nearly 600 years before our era, the Jews themselves understood no more the language of to the absent defendants Prentis and Carter, their ancestors, and had adopted one intermixed with those of neighboring nations. It is in this dialect called Hebrew, to which, hereafter, were added some Greek and Latin words. The Talmuds are written, as and posted at the door of the Court-house of well as most of the books considered to be ancient, by the modern Jews .- This loss of a language, so materially connected with the history of the earth, and in which so much information was accumulated, has exercised the sagacity of a great number of studious men, at different periods, among various The subscriber informs his customers and nations and religious sects. Many have atits original principles, and through them raestablish it, as well as (of course) the right sense of the words. Not only Christians, but Jews, and even Mahometans, rivalled in zeal for it; but in vain have many among them spent their whole lives, as none could attain its forgotten principles, and the edifice which they sometimes raised, with a thousand struggles, for want of a good foundation, crumbled down at the least touch. The author will not hesitate to say, that he knew, long before, the rock on which they all had been wrecked, and would not have ventured on a sea covered with the testimonies of their misfortunes, if peculiar circumstances had not brought him again to the subject almost without perceiving it. His studies were, at first, directed to another object. A work on archeology, embracing the whole history of the earth, fixed his attention. When employed in deep researches about the principal languages of Asia and Africa, he was led to examine the Hebrew he had studied in his youth, just after the manner it is generally learned—that is, very imperfectly. This language, interesting un bout 5 feet 8 or 9 inches high, of a yellow | der various points of view, attracted the complexion, tolerably well made, has a more his notice on account of having not lump on his right ankle, occasioned by a cut, and limps a little in his walk, has a mole on his left cheek, a mark on one of his languages that had more analogy with its origin. The uncommon path he had taken, determined the irregular manner he adopted dry articles of clothing, among which were a brown coat, dark corded pantaloons, and a learned men had in vain attempted to do, he accomplished. Without difficulty, he discovered the principles of the Hebrew, and rendered himself capable of ascertaining tho sense of its terms, not through the knowledge of the Greek and Latin translations, most of which are erroneous, but by an intible clothing, part of which were a brown | mate knowledge of its-genius. Looking, coat, silk waist coat, blue cassimere panta- then, with an investigating eye, on the inesbove negroes have obtained free passes, and Hebrews, that is into the Sepher of Moses,

The subscriber will give the above reward might be vastly interesting for humanity; This discovery was for the author a strong motive for making an attempt to restore the Hebrew language, which could facilitate their knowledge; but he had not that motive alone:
