Davidson was the fourth to appear. He advanced with a firm and manly step: he was evidently in prayer, and was immediately joined by Mr. Cotton, who prayed with him fervently. He made no ob jection to the cap being put over his eyes, and directed that a handkerchief which he had in his hand might be added. His conduct was most decorous, and he was evidently making the best use of his time to make his peace with God. He did not utter a syllable connected with his situation, but bow-ed respectfully when he came on the platform. Thistlewood again spoke and said, "I have but a few moments to live; I hope you will report to all the world that I died a sincere friend to liberty." He then bowed to a gentleman who stood near the railings and repeated the above words as he ad frequently seen that individual at public meetngs. Ings laughed on looking at the coffins, and said, turning his back on them, "I'll turn my back apon death! Is this the gallows they always use? Those coffins are for us, I suppose!"

Tidd, who stood next to him, and had the monent before been in conversation with Thistiewood, turned about and said, "Don't Ings. There s no use in all this noise. We can die without making a noise!" Ings was silent for a few monents; but as the executioner approached him with the rope, he called out, "Do it well-pull it hand, and squeezed it energetically. Brunt stopped and took a pinch of snuff from a paper which he had in his hand, while the caps were pulling over Tidd's and Thistlewood's eyes. The composure of this man, particularly on Sunhad with him on Sunday, he expressed himself in the most unmoved manner, as perfectly resigned to his fate, and declared then, as he has done repeat edly since, that this day would be the happiest of by any thing like a feeling of nature. His face remained in death exactly what it had been while he lived; the was placed in the fourth coffin, and the man in the mask having performed his part, the head was exhibited as the others had been, with the exclamation, "This is the head of William Davidson, the traitor." No blood had fallen from the other heads, but from this a few drops fell. The hisses and groans of the crowd were repeated on this occasion, while the head was deposited in the collin which contained the criminal's body. The executioner and his assistant now proceeded to cut down the last of the sufferers-Brunt. The block was placed at the head of the fifth coffin .-The blood which had stained the block was wiped off with the saw-dust, and the rope being cut, they attempted to lift the body to the place where the last part of the sentence was to be executed, when it was found that in putting up the platform part of his clothing had been shut in with it, and it held him so tight that a considerable effort was necessary to disengage the remains of the wretched culprit. He was placed in the fifth coffin. His miserable and cadaverous countenance presented but a ghastly spectacle while he was alive-but dead, its aspect was little less than terrific, and the dark hair which overhung his forchead came in frightful contrast with the purple hue produced by the agonies of death. The masked executioner, while performing his duty, happened to let the head fall from his hands on the sawdust. The howlings and grouns of the spectators were again heard at that moment, and amidst these the operator retired, having first handed the discoloured "trunkless ball" to the assistant executioner, who, advancing, as in each of the other cases, first to the side of the scaffold nearest to Giltspur-street, then to the front, and lastly to the side looking towards the felon's door, proclaimed aloud "This is the head of John Thomas Brunt, the traitor." His head was then placed in the coffin.

Here ended this awful scene. The coffins with the bodies and heads were subsequently removed into the jail. We sincerely trust, that the dreadful but necessary example thus made of these deluded men, may have a wholesome operation upon the minds of others, and that they may be deterred
