Farewell weet helds and woods? love,
Farewell my native Locust Grove,
Farewell ye scenes of childhood's days,
Where my heart danced in youthful plays,
Where first parental precepts prest
Their lasting image on my breast;

FARMERS' REPOSITORY. CHARLESTOWN, JEFFERSON COUNTY, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1831. PORTIGAL.

From the "The Year, with other poems." By the Author of "The Full of the Indian."

Hark to the voice of Winter! He hath laid His grasp upon the Wilderness, and tossed The shivering garments of the woods aloft, Forth to the warring elements! He rends
The venerable Oak; and moss grown Fine, And strews their splintered fragments in the dust Lo! on the midnight tempest he hath flung have been supported by the same of the woods and field. And craggy precipiee, and oottage voo! He gives the Frost its message; and the brook That in the hollow valley runs its race, Halts in its pabbly channel, and its face Soon takes the fixed and stony gaze of death.

The Lake in which the wild swan dipped it

The Lake in which the wild swan dipped its wing.

And the white canvass walted swift along The fisher's stender shallop, is now chained In shackles by the Frost's insidious hand. Its shores are mute save when the fowler's gun With sharp report booms on the frosty air, Or the long bay of distant hound is heard. With shivering stop, and pale, despairing face Creeps from the East, the tardy Winter Morn! He brings his nimble messengers, the Winds, And the white Sleet, and silent-drifting Snow, And many a Tempest bleak, in his dark train. Upon his aged temples gleams a crown Framed by the subtle Frost; and down his breast A silvery beard in rough profusion flows. As forth-he walks, the fisky snow descends, And o'er the plains the shapeless hillocks awell, Like foaming billows on the moonlit sea. Then bend the leafless branches of the Wood With plumy tresses, and resplendent Ice, And comes the Frost, and plies his magio task, And o'er the wave a lucid film extends Like that which dims the glazing eye of death. Then vanish all the minatrels of the air, Savethe lone Bittern, which with tuncless scream Flits round the fens, or strikes his pointed bill Deep in the frozen surface of the brook. My Dear Sir: -I was extremely glad to learn that you had accepted the appointment of a member of the Baltimore Convention, which is to assemble next week, to nominate, for the consideration of the people of the U.

States, candidates for their President and Vice President; and that notwithstanding the extraordinary inclemency of the weather, you had proceeded to of the weather, you had proceeded to the city where the important trust is to be performed. It is to be sincerely hoped that the acknowledged patriot-ism and intelligence of the Conven-tion, aided by the purity of intention and practical good sense by which I have so often witnessed you to be guided, in public affairs, may conduct our deliberations to results satisfactory to the community. I must have been entirely regardless of passing events, if I had not observe mentioned as being likely to be brought before the Convention, and that, in instructed by their constituents to yield support to it, as a Candidate for the Presidency. The very unusual inclemency of the weather prevented the prompt strival of many of the delegates, though they had seemingly allowed themselves time enough to be present at the opening of the Convention—about 130, however, appeared at 12 o'clock at the Athernæum, when Gen. MOTICE.

WE are obliged to inform such of the inhabitants of Charlestown and its vicinity, who wish to deposit the remains of their deceased servants in the Methodist Burying Ground, that the part allotted for the blacks is nearly filled -The very small remainder is reserved for particular cases. We have willingly complied with the requests of our neighbours, for privileges of this kind, until it has become inconvenient to grant any more .-We therefore hope, that some other place will be found for those people.

Considering the scantiness of our burying grounds in this town, it is to be hoped that a potters field will be purchased ere, long.
