We like the dispassionate tone which runs sealed ventile. It saven of the Plansiful through the following article from the Washington Examiner. There is nothing in it to offend the most sensitive adherent of the Administration, and it carries conviction along would be the duty of the court to grant. ministration, and it carries conviction along with it in every sentence. We carneally commond it to the perusal of all parties.

The idea of a government mank was long ago cause in exploded. The metallic currency, suggested in the plan of Mr. Rives, by doing away with the small bills of the Stato Banks, cannot succeed; first, because, three-fourths of the members of Congress are opposed to it, and, second, because it is impossible to carry such a plan into effect. The exercise of such power by the general government would be too odious to be tolerated. What is the which a tude of State Banks spring up in its place. At bevery time the New York Legislature passes esolutions adverse to the United States Bank, fifthe very time the New York Legislature passes resolutions adverse to the United States Bank, fifty petitions for New State Banks are on its ubble! The members of the Legislature who vote drive the United States Bank, are interested more or less in voting up the fifty new State Banks. In the prospect of destroying the United States Bank, the rage for State Banks prevails far and wide the most girantic schemes are on foot. Thus in carlode; specie payment is stopped; The work-ingman finds his dollar to be worth but fifty or six-ty cents. Universal distress ensites, and then the body politic is regenerated. The authors of the distress recant their opinions. The "monster" distress recant their opinions. The "monster" is again created, the currency is restdred, and we go back to the good old way.

All-this war, it is evident, arises from no hosulity to a United States Bank, as a Bank. The President aimself, by his own admission, is in favor of a Bank, but not of the Bank. If he had been called upou, he would have suggested the project of a Bank. Hy consequence, as Mr. Cambreleng tells us, Mr. Van Buren agrees with the President. Mr. Yan Buren is for a Bank, but not the friend of the present Bank. What then is the strife! to change this institution for another; to throw down "one monster," and to creed another; to throw down "one monster," and to creed another "monster," in Pennsylvania to "a monster," in New York. It is a strife between two great States, and, in some degree, rival cities. ster" in New York. It is a strife between two great States, and, in some degree, rival cities.— The politicians of one State desire to incorporate the Hank power of a rival State with their own political power.—Politica were the beginning, the cause, and the object of the wart. We put it to the People, therefore, it it worth while to agistate and agonize this whole country, to disorder the currency, to derange all the operations of trade, and leasen in value the products of agriculture, to make New York the master of Pennsylvania; to aggrandize the cupire State at the exvaria, to make New York the master of Pennsylvania; to aggrandize the empire State at the expense of the key State!—This is the plain English of all the strift, and every man whose eyes are not shut can see that it is.—En ourselves, we are disposed to enlist in no such a critisade.—We desire the contractions.

Indiana II is scarcely possible to keep pace with our spirit of improvement and interprize, which does not creep sloth-like tries, but flies almost with eagle's wings, and with a celerity proportioned to the immense extent of territory in which it is occupied. Within a few-years past, as we learn from the Newcastle [Ky.] Advertiser, the peatitful town named at the head of this acide has spring up almost as by fingic, upon an elevated plateau, in the midst of the dense primeval forests that line the banks of the Ohio. Already it counts a thriving population of 400, and has a three story spacious college edifice, with one hundred and sixty pupils, who are not only taught the higher branches, but also the useful, albelic and manual employments of agriculture and the me are not only taught the higher branches, but also the merial, athletic and manual employments of agriculture and the mechanic arts, on a farm of 150 acres, belonging to the corporation, and in the two workshops of carpentry, coopering, wagon and chair making, attached to the edifice. This is as it should be; and we rejoice to see the manual labor system, in practical operation, as an essential part of gduestion. It is the best kind of gymnastics, as it gives us a knowledge of arts that may be eminently useful to us in after life, and which never can be thought to have any discredit attached to them, where the whole of our population are and ought to be, by the very democracy of our institution, laborious and industrious. In the institution at South Haaver, the students, we are gratified to learn, take a pride in these occupations. EDWARD HUGHES, ne sequipation of knowledges. Amidst the taching to the instruction of youth, and the responsible, the subscriber is not without the least of Jefferson, on the first Mooday in classed, whilst he takes much pleasure in acknowledging that they have been adequate-live recorded.

He may be permitted to mention, with some degree of complacency, that the discipline of the school (which is that of our best regulated Colleges) has not interfered with the attachment and partiality to it of those on whom it was intended to operate.

ACTHE solicitation of some friends, a few young tadies will be received, to whose instruction a lady qualfined by education and experience, under the supervision of the Principal, will be wholly devoted.

The course of instruction will, as heretofore, embrace as thorough and practical knowledge of the substantial branches of a good English education. The ancient and modern languages will also receive due attention.

JOHN J. HICKEY, Principal.
