DRYDEN.-Dryden who was noto riously poor, was one evening in company with the Duke of Buckingham, Lord Dorset, and some other nobleman of wit and genius. It happened that the conversation, which was literary, turned on the art of composition and elegance of style; and, after some debate, it was agreed that each party should write something on whatever subject chanced to strike his imagination, and place it under the candlestick for Mr. Dryden's judgment. Most of the company took uncommon pains to out do each other, while Lord Dorset, with much composure, wrote two or three lines; and carelessly threw them to the place agreed on. The rest having finished, the arbiter opened the leaves of their destiny. In going through the whole, he discovered strong marks of pleasure and satisfaction; but at one in particular, he seemed in raptures. 'I must acknowledge," says Dryden there are abundance of fine things in my hands, and such as do honor to the personages who wrote them; but I am under the indispensible necessity of giving the highest preference to my Lord Dorset. It is a fact that there is a railroad in Europe where the speed of two hundred and sixteen miles an hour is ordinarily obtained-not indeed for passengers, but for timber! It is the celebrated slide of Alphach, in the Alps, constructed for the purpose of conveying trees from the mou... tains to the Lake of Lucerne. The following is a description of this famous flide : in the year 1818, is formed entirely of about 250,000 large pine trees, deprived of their bark, and united together in a very ingenius manner, without the aid of iron. It occupied 160 workmen during 18 months and cost 100,000 francs, or £1250. It is about three leagues, or forty-four thousand English feet long. It has a trough about six feet broad, and from three to six deep. Its bottom is formed of three trees, the middle of one of which has a groove cut in the direction of its length for receiving small rills of water, which are conducted into it from various places, for the purpose of dininishing the friction.
