PER WEEK, I am thereby enabled to offer greater inducements to Farmers and others having Wheat to dispose of, than has ever been ofed in this section of Virginia—being located amediately at the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road, and also the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. In endeavoring to advance the interests of the Whig party, by the publication of a cheap and efficient paper, so centrally located as to communicate promptly with all parts of the union; devoted to the correction of existing abuses, and advocating the Government, that the purposes for which it was established —the promotion of the prosperity and happiness of the nation—may be accomplished; the Subscribers helieve that their design will be generally approved and assorded by the public a liberal support.

board do not state by whom they were kept; but there is no doubt at Springfield acto their authorship. From the nature of the case, they must have been in a great measure fictitious, and proof of their gross incorrectness is in the hands of the Representative from that district. Such were the examinations and such the evidence on which many of the ressonings and conclusions were based. How they could be otherwise than fallacious, it may be difficult to perceive. A few items in the report may be examined in detail to illustrate the errors into which the board were led. The board complain of the heavy loss on barrels as evidence of bad contracts by the civil superintendent. When the late superintendent went into office, in 1833, the Government was receiving iron from eight manu-precedented extent of thirty-five per cent. This extraordinary state of things, however, the board seem to have anticipated; for in their recommendations to the department, on page 7th, they say: 'This Government is very likely to sustain a heavy loss on the manufacture of the gan-barrel, owing to the defective iron,' &c. The board represent that the late superintendent 'made a tariff for the new-model musket in violation of orders, at the suggestion of the workmen, is the absence of the master amover and without his knowledge; and that the workmen exercised an undue control in the establishment of the prices.' The superintendent's authority for regulations, Par. 30, 31, and 40. Moreover, at the time of the transition from the old to the rew model muskets, Lieut Col. Talcott, then in charge of the ordnance office, directed the superintendent to make a tariff for the work on a new goar; the colonel himself fixed the per diem allowances for the five principal classes of work, and directed the superintendent to fix the prices of the piece-work as soon as practicable. This case happened about eight years ago, and during that period the board appear to have found three or four instances where a workman had earned three dollars a day for two or three weeks together, in an effort to make up lost time. It seems that the dispute which has adelphia for four or five years past; and, existed between the United States and doubtless taking a true prospective view of Great Britain, for many long years, has been at last adjusted. The National Intelligencer, which speaks with authority, declares that the whole matter is settled. The terms of the adjudication are not given; but it is probable, as all the paries interested were fully and ably represented, they are such as will produce satisfaction on all sides.

How much better is this for both nations than to have gone to war! How much has each of them gained, not only in the mere elements of commercial and industrial prosperity, but in dignity, self-respect, and moral influence! Had they gone to war, besides destroying thousands of the Road. This, we learn, is the first of people, and wasting millions of dellars worth of property, they would have engendered a bitterness and recrimination, from the prejudice of which neither would have escaped for half a century.—
