RISK OF MERCANTILE LIFE. - General Dearborn, in a lecture delivered last winter, before the farmers of the Massachusetts Legislature, declared that binetyseven out of every one hundred persons who obtained their livelihood by buying and selling, failed, or died insolvent .-This fact he ascertained by reference to the books of the custom-house, the banks, the Probate office, and from the recollections of the oldest merchants. If the statement approximates the truth in relation to the risks of mercantile life, it should induce fathers who can place their sons upon a farm to instill into their minds a love of agricultural pursuits. General Dearborn declared that "he would prefer a cottage in the statement of the statement of the statement approximates the truth in relation to the statement approximates the truth in relation to the statement of $7000 upon Brokers, and which went in $3000 to clared that "he would prefer a cottage in the country with five acres of ground, to CATTLE.—On Monday the offerings of beef John Carners

MESSES. EDITORS :- Allow me most respectfully to invite your attention to the grossest outrage upon the peace and quiet of our little town. We allude to the unlawful assemblies of Dogs in our streets at night. Hardly have our good people retired from the cares and toils of the day, before the gathering the eares and toils of the day, before the gathering of the doggish clan commences. To one who is suddenly roused from his dreams, the spectacle is truly appalling. Not a street nor alley but sends forth its scores; cut loose from the restraints of chains, blooks, and kennels, they run mad with the privileges of the night. Here and there they go with steamboat velocity, growling, howling, yelping, and fighting. Drawing up about the door and windows of some peaceful abode, they distract and terrify its quiet inmates with their infernal yells.

Thus disturbed, we have passed several sleepless nights lately. But we now promise you, Messrs.

Editors, and all the proprietors of canine stock, that we will endure this grievance no longer. To rid ourselves of it, we have but one lamp by which rid ourselves of it, we have but one lamp by which our feet are to be guided, and that is the lamp of experience. Hitherto we have exercised patience, satresty, and supplication, with the owners of dogs in our vicinity; but all to no purpose. Hereafter we shall strive to remedy the evil in our own way.

From this time forth, powder and ball shall be the factorization of the county of record in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of Jefferson County, the undersigned, Trustees, will sell, on Saturday the 6th day of August next, at 11 o'clock, A. THE AMERICAN ECLIPSE. From the .V. Y. Spirit of the Times.

The portrait of Grey Eagle from which our engraving is taken, was painted by Mr. Ed. Troye, in May, 1841. The horse was then standing at Equira, the beautiful residence of Col. Edward Blackburn, about half way between Lexington and Frankfort. The Colonel is familiarly known among his acquaintances as "Uncle Ned," and is alike celebrated for his enthusiastic devotion to horses and his ability in the discussion of their merits. We still retain a very vivid recollection of a and copious as his own fountain "at the foot of the hill." We shall be pardoned, we trust, for introducing here a characteris ic anecdote of him, as furnished by an Indiana correspondent of ours, who, we wish, would write oftener:-In 1836, a party of Kentuckians, in the absence of their favorite amusement, employed a day in the chace, and at its close, retreated to one of those princely mansions all other machines for effectually cleansing grain in Woodford, where a generous welcome, of garlic, smut, and other impurities. It reand good cheer, too, is never wanting .-Henry Clay and Uncle Ned were of the clipse at Uncle Ned's could not fail, in and gives general satisfaction, saving much in such company and on such an occasion, to engross a large share of its attention .-Every one present remembered how the ening Ploughs. "Well, Uncle Ned, you have American Eclipse, and I am glad of it: but am very fearful it will be out of your power to say much new in his praise. You have had so many fine horses and have said so much in their behalf, that your ideas of perfection must be nearly exhausted. To use your own language, Whip was the finest horse you ever saw in your life-Kosciusko was the best Sir Archy horse, was the gayest and finest trotter of the where he is prepared to make and repair same stock, and from Virginia-Lance was an own brother to Ariel, the best race nag that ever graced the earth since Adam and Eve were placed in the garden of Eden! Now, Uncle Ned, what can you say new for Eclipse!"

This was a severe shot, and all present considered Uncle Ned "out on a limb," where the hunter chased the coon-the jumping off place, awfully steep! His place," but here was his own eloquence brought into judgment against him!-Every gentleman present seeing Uncle Ned's apparent embarrassment, would have much preferred that Mr. Clay had spared his joke. It was now too late to think of that, and his friends mentally invoked to his aid that ready wit and repartee which had, on a thousand similar occasions, brought him off more than conqueror. All eyes were directed to him, as one of Uncle Ned's good natured smiles lighted up his countenance. It was like a vivid flash of lightning on a dark and dreary night. At the instant, he rose to their glasses. The pleasant duty was Northern Champion of the Turf. "Eclipse among horses as Henry Clay is amongst men!" responded Uncle Ned, amid the loud plaudits of the company, "Harry of charge. the West" being the only silent person present. Probably a more delicate and well-timed compliment was never paid to any man at the festive board. My infor-
