OBITUARY.

One by one our venerated fathers are gathered t their final resting places, and all our long cherished and by-gone days, descend with them to the grave. Such is human life, such human hopes! The prattling infant, the active youth, the full grown man. and the aged sire, are all hurrying onward to the tomb. Reflections of this kind arise in the mind when contemplating the recent departure of one who lived even beyond "three score and ten," one who was dear to many, and whose death has left a blank in their hearts that earths dearest joys can never fill; and sent out a sorrow that all earth's delusive smiles an never soothe. AMBROSE CRAMER, for four years a citizen of Middleway, Jefferson county, Va., departed this life on Friday March 3d, in the 89th year of his age, in the presence of one of his chil-dren, and a grand child from each branch of his family. Mr. Cramer was born August 24th, 175k, in Downpatrick, a considerable town, situated in the Gounty of Down, Ireland. He received a wellgrounded business education, and was, for more Thos Shriver, and Danies Steiner, Cumber- Kirk M C 2 than twenty years, a most respectable and prosperous merchant of his native place. In 1797 the well known disturbances broke out, which not only deprived many of their property, but even life itself was unsafe, no matter how harmless the viction.— All comfort and peace departed from many a happy joyful home, and many hearts that cloug to their native land with a devotion unknown-from a pecialiar and unlooked for state of feeling that grose in the minds of men-with one sad and gloomy resolution, determined to seek a new home. Among the num-ber was Mr. Cramer, who, in July, 1800, chargered a ship called the Polina, Capt. Brooks of Boston, with all his family around him, save one dear son, he embarked, and sailing from Strangford Bay, after a passage of seventy-two days, landed in September ed and removed to a farm situated on the line be-tween Jefferson and Frederick counties, V2, where he resided for upwards of thirty-three years in much comfort and peace. Far off from the dangers and trials of his native land, this devoted, fond parent, made shoes, among which arelooked on his rising family and blessed them as being spared from the evil to come; and would often say to them, for you and your happiness 1 bid face-well to my own dear land. He had made a large pecuniary sacrifice, I ft his relatives and a host of warm friends-his country, the graves of his fathers, and numerous and endearing recollections. Amidst the duce almost all to give them the preference be declared a bankrupt on Monday the first day sad scenes of the Rebellion, Mr. Cramer aided in over Northern work. many important plans to secure the safety of his own and neighbors' families from even suspicion; and although at heart opposed to England's oppression, he er than usual.

March 30 He enrolled himself as one of forty-five thousand, who armed and equipped themselves for the defeace of Ireland from invasion; being all men of respectability and wealth, and called to their head as commander Lord Charlemont. His home in his own land, as well as in the land of his adoption, was the home of hospitality; its master was a gentleman, a christian, and a philanthropist; his dear partner in life, a lady of superior mind and manners, with every on earth. His was the ever open door for the clergy of all denorainations—the learned and unlearned—the rich and the poor, all, all, were made welcome the rich and the poor, all, all, were made welcome the rich and the peor, all, all, were made welcome by as warm a heart as ever sent over the human frame life's warm current. His children loved him with adoration seldom equalled, for his affection and tenderness were unbounded; his example on all occasions to them was of the most exalted character, and while he spoke of earthly duties, he never falled to open their hearts and minds to a contemplation of heavenly things. As a christian, he was devotedly pious and humble, as a parent all that was intended by his maker, as a husband the most devoted and kind, manly kind—as a citizen at once useful and kind and kind a manly kind a citizen at once useful and kind a manl
