On Wednesday the 13th inst., after a long and painful illness, Mrs ANN MAGARRY, consort of Mr.

Join Magarry, sr., of this county, in the 63d year of

TON EIGHELBERGER, Student of Medicine, and son of the late Adam Eichelberger, in the 21st year of

At the age of 17 years, the deceased devoted himself to intense study of his intended profession, which he pursued with unabated energy, and to which he fell a martyr. In the University of Pennsylvania during the winter of '41, he subjected himself to a course of severe application to his studies, which seriously invaded his health, and be returned to his home, bearing the evidences of an injured constitution. He had then a long and dangerous illness, from which, though well enough to appear is the or-dinary walks of life, he had never fully recovered. His last illness presented no alarming indication un-til a very short time before his death, and his case was so well controlled by the treatment solvised; that he had the promise of a safe and sure convalescence. when an unexpected change speedily exhausted the already enfeebled powers of his system.

But few individuals close their earthly existence at his age, with so many virtues and so few faults, as distinguished the character of this most estimable youth. In every relation he sustained a bearing, which elicited the high esteem and approbation of all mother, he was a comfort and support. His admira-ble traits had drawn the tender cords of her heart too foully around him, and with too much joy did she anticipate his hopeful manhood. As a brother, he was kind and effectionate-as a pupil, he was respectful, grateful and promising-highly esteemed in the office and family of his preceptor, who tooked with pride on the rich promises he exhibited of becoming at an early day an ornament to his profession; as a friend, he was sincere and affidde; as a companion, courteous and worthy of imitation. With all these personal qualifications, he was not regardless of his daties to his Creator. Unusually moral and sedate from childhood, he became some months ago deeply impressed with the value and importance of the Christian Religion. The reading of his Bible was a never-omitted portion of his daily exercise, and he was preparing for an open avoid of the wise part he had chosen. To his view the approach of death a versaled no gulph of despair. When told that he was a large to the large that he was a large to the large that he was drawing near to the goal of mortality, that he was drawing near to the gost of moready, no shade of remores, mainted his no cloud of starm, no shade of remores, mainted his brow. He complained not, he repined not he felt no regret—all, all was peace. Turning to his mother and friends with heart-gushing affection, he there and friends with heart-gushing affection, he hade them farewell! Then having commended their ment before the said 1st December next, to James the residue on a credit of ment before the said 1st December next, to James the residue on a credit of the said the residue of the said to the residue of the residue o the vale of death, from this world of dark eess to so eternity of celestial day. Oh when, on the Keanebee banks I shall roam, And revil again in the joys of my home, Methinks I'll recall oftentimes to my mind, The friends that I leave on Potomas behind.

When I rose there at eve, by the dark-rolling tide, With those that are nearest my heart be my side,
I'll remember that here once admiring I trod,
On the brink if this river—the grass of this sod.

If Fate should decree that I visit no more,
The fair ones I leave by this wild mountain shore,
Los g, long shall their charms & their virtues impai
