HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

WASHINGTON, January 6, 1947. The resolution of Mr. Harralsop, under consideration when the House adjourned on Tuesday, ken up, and Mr. Root's motion to lay on the table was negatived. The bill was then taken up, in Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and Mr. -SMITH, of Indiana, addressed the committee in opposition to the administration, and in reply to some of the positions assumed by Mr. Preston King, in his "personal explanation" on slavery of yesterday. Mr. Smith charged the President with having, in his management of the war, lost sight of that decorum which should always characterise the acts of the Chief Magistrate-with an effort to silence all inquiries into the conduct of the administration-of having intrigued with Santa Anna, who had done more to disgrace the Mexican rame than any man over at the head of the Mexican government. He defended Gen. Scott, then expressed, notwithstanding the ridicule which it had been attempted to cast upon him and his "hasty plate of soup," now commands the admiration of even his political enemies. The whigs on this floor, he said, would deserve all the opprobrium which had been superior discretion which he had shown-they all cast upon them by their political opponents, if they did not stand up and resist the outrages which had been perpetrated by the President and his himself more discreet than some of his colleagues it had departed from their minds, that those very supporters. There was nothing more conclutice—to fling around it the halo of the pure light sive, in his mind, of the correctness of their principles, than that tribute of respect and admiration. gratitude and love, with which time always hallowed the memory of those who had been the chief supporters of that cause. Though, during their lives, nothing was more common than to traduce, to slander, to villify the great apostles of liberty yet, now that time had sanctified their deeds -now that experience had proved the wisdom of their loudest and foremost in denouncing them, now loudest and foremost to do them reverence! They could find no man so lost to all sense of truth, at least so regardless of his own character, as to express terms of disapprobation and disrespect of any of the great heads of democracy now gathered to their fathers. From Jefferson to Jackson. they were all objects of veneration and respect. No one could be found to say aught against them. Yet, had it been so long since that the memory o halls resounded with the denunciatory thunders of the opposition against the very man whom the entleman from Ohio held up as an example ?-Was the period so remote that he could not remember it, when a mighty war of opposition went forth throughout the country against every one of Jackson's deeds?—when Nero and Caligula were saints to him?--when every miserable dolt that ever blundered in legislative action was wise to him?-when every tyrant that had ever trampled on the rights of his fellows were pure and merciful to him? Yes, from the small whispers of the paltry secret foe, to the rude roar of loud-mouthed calumny in high places-from the "God-like," down, down, down to the meanest po'itical "slangwhanger" that ever wore out the patien e of county club-the shout and clamor of opposition were raised against that very man who was now of all praise and imitation. Indeed, it was one of the attributes of the great and good that they were able to extort praise and eulogy even from their bitterest enemies. And it was encouraging to the present administration to reflect upon all that orphan who would derive comfort from reading the speeches of the opposition on that floor ?sorrows, in the praises of their enemies and their cause? Did they imagine that the vehement de nunciations of the war as unjust, and the highly wrought declamatory appeals in favor of "poor Mexico," would drop like healing balm on the a valliant son-there was not a wife who had los a gallant husband, that could bear to read one of such speeches as they had heard from the opposi tion upon that floor. Where was there such a mother who would exclaim to her surviving sons -" your brother perished in an unholy and unust cause. You must remain at home; you will draw no sword in such a cause?" For the Free Press. Messra Editors:—The following lines were writ-ten by an affectionate brother on the death of a much beloved sister, and presented to his afficted

Mother weep not, though siss has gone, Her spirit's housed above. She's left bleak earth and upward borne, To realms of perfect love. Her happy soul is now on high, Freed from all eares and pain, Shut in with God, no more to die,

No more go out again. Weep not, mother, weep not, I say, She's with angelic hosts, Praising God through endless day For having saved the lost. She's looking out for us to come With ever watchful eye-

To greet us in that heavenly bourne Where tears are ever dry. Mother, weep not ! let thy tear be dry, Your child again you'll see, Il hen wafted to your home on high, Throughout eternity. Then with your darling one above, You'll join the engelic strains, And channt the anthems of your God,

Pay up your Taxes! HE Texes for the year 1846, are now due, and it is earnestly desired that those indebted will promptly discharge the claims against them.
