POETRY

I LOVE A LAUGE. I love a laugh - a wild gay laugh,

Fresh from the fount of freting, That speaks a heart enshrined within, Its joy's revealing. I love a laugh—a wild, gay laugh!
Oh! who would always sorrow,
And west a sad and mournful face

And fear the morrow I love a laugh; it cheers the heart Of age, bowed down by sadness, To hear the music in the tones

Of childhood's gladness. I love a laugh ; this world would be At least a dreary dwelling, If heart could never speak to beart, Its pleasures telling.

Then frown not at a wild, gay lough, Or chale the merry-Searted-A cheerful heart and smiling face Can ne'er be parted.

THE RIVULET.

I love the little, laughing sill, That, all the live long day, Goes sparkling, singing, dancing still, Through meadows far away. O, off I've chased that sportive stream

In summer's sunny hours, And watched each silvery ripple gleam, Or plucked the bordering flowers. And still I love to stand and gaze Along its winding share, And dream of happy, happy days,

That will return no more. But life like thee, flows on; sweet rill ; And I, like thee, must haste, Each day, to do my Father's will,
