'On his return from Labradores he took another pass leading to Linares and was attacked by a large body of the enemy, and his rear guard out off. This was effected by rolling stones into the pass, which was scarcely wide enough for a sin gle horseman. May managed to get through with the main body and reached a spot where he was enabled to dismount and return to the succor of the rear-guard, but it was too late, as the enemy had retreated with their prize.

At one time during the passage of the gorge the dragoons would have been almost at the mercy of the enemy, had the latter discharged their pieces with any accuracy; for the position they occupied was directly over the heads of our troops We cannot ascertain Col. May's lloss, or whether he had any men killed or not.
