POETRY.

From the Philadelphia Saituday Courser. WOMAN. BY SEXHY D FERNDENFEE.

There is a besute in the glostening morn That wakes the heart to a most bely love : There is a grand or in the howling storm That lifts the spirit to a source above.

There is a splendor in the glorious noon, That fills the bosom with a mighty power; And graceful beauty in the silvery moon. That shapes our fancies in the quiet hour.

There is a sweetness in the twilight tide, That wakes the senses to a poet's mood : And secret whispering where the breezes glide And wind along the melanchaly wood.

Soft music murmurs from the strippling stream That stirs the bosom's deep and allent cell, And radiance glitters in the starry beam, That in our Visions makes emotions swell.

But there's no beauty like to woman's face, Which wins the heart a willing captive, her's There is no sailing moon like woman's grace, Which so bewilders and our feelings stire There are no twilight eyes like woman's brow, Gilding the visions of a poet's dresms ; No music where the hastening breezes blow Like women's voice, that so angelic seems. There is no star so bright as woman's eve,

Which wins the spirit from a world 1 k - this; Her voice, whose tones no rippling stream can vie To charm the heart, or wrap the soul in bliss ;

"A COMRECTION" CORRECTED.

Under the head of " a correction," the letter published in the 'Free Press,' a few weeks since, from Mexico, in which the politics of Gen. Taylor was noticed.
