The auditory appeared solemn, for the presence or death and the thoughts of judgment strike mest with scriousness; but there were no tears. When the services were closed, we passed into an adjoining room where lay the remains, cold, still, desolate. All contemplated them in silence, and with a solemn decorum of manner, but none wept. The coffin's lid was screwed down, and those appointed took up the corpse, and carrying it, unaccompanied by the weeping train, to its sepulchre, interred it amidst frost and snow; and there we left the friendless man, "tshes to ashes, dust to dust," till the judgment morning. It was a mournful spettacle, that tearless funeral. A wintry grave is always drear, but how doubly drear when uncheered by the warm sympathy of edeared friendship. Never before was I so struck with melancholy beauty of the sable circle veeping around the bier of one beloved: it is like the illumined background of a glowing sunset, reflected on a calm, bleak, leafless scene of winter.

But let us gather instruction from the event. Let the intemperate, yea, the moderate drinker, the passionate and vicious, be admonished. The ungoverned indulgence or reckless tampering with the appetites, and the unrestrained gratification of the unruly inclinations and tempers, not only rob us of the friendship of God; but also of that human tiendship, which is like the beauty of spring dying cheerless heart, tenderly smoothing our dying clows and sorrowing over our dust.

The history of the times contains glowing commendations of railroads and other systems of internal improvements. Amongst the many benefits secured by the construction of many beneats secured by the construction of railroads, the effect which they produce on the manufacturing interests of the nation, is, by manufacturing interests of the nation, is, by usefuluess and honor, ever remembering that of proper attention to manufactories has subjected us, as a nation to evils of no small magnitude. False theorists would lead us believe that the Union is rendered durable by fostering agriculture in one of its sections and manufactories in the other. But let such remember, that, to protect agriculture requires one policy of Government, and the protection of manufactories requires another. How then can one Government, acting on a single policy, protect both ? It is impossible But these theorists tell us the division of iafor creates between the different sections a mit all dependence. To them we would say, that radways assimilate the natures of labo without stroying this mutual dependence.

By the exerts of a happy influence on agriculture, they have the productions of the produced requires and the sarplus thus produced requires a market, and holds out inducements to the manufacturer. Thus, the promotion of agriculture gives origin to manufactories, and it is fair to infer that it will constitute their great feeding agent -But, by what process of the mutual denenadapted to the growth of different commodities of commerce. The cold climate of the North is stapted to the growth of wool, while North to not climate of the South is adapted to the cultivation of cotton. The necessities of the South demand the wool of the North, and those of the North the cotton of the South. An exchange of production is inevitable.-The manufacturer of the South must receive from the farmer of the North the wool with which to conduct his operations, and the Northern manufacturer must receive his supplies of cotton from the Southern agriculturist, or each must confine himself to the manufacturing of productions of his own climate. HOW TO PREVENT THE CHOLERA

A town in Tennessee has entirely escaped he scourge of the Cholera the past winter, not a case of it having occurred there, notwithstanding every other fown in the vicinity suffered from it severely. This has been attributed, and no doubt correctly, to the free and universal use of quick-lime, fresh from the kilns, which was scattered through the gutters, cellars, privies and vards. Its disinfecting properties in scilies with avidity on all impure and delections gases are well known and where plentifully used, will would, under ordinary circumstances of brudence and cleanliness, preserve the health of any cities and villages in the U

Most gardeners have experienced a great deal of vexation from the destruction of their plants by the cut-worm. The cabbageplant structives. They are much more abundant I think in southern gardens than at the north, and in many gardens, the plant devoted to cabbages has to be often almost entirely replanted. There is a simple and efficient preventive, which requires only to be known to be universally practised when ne-

On the site of your intended row of plants dig a narrow trench three or four inches deep, and in the bottom of this trench set your plants as usual, and the cut-worm will not go into the trench to injure the plants. The experiment was fully tested the past summer by the witer, and proved perfectly satisfactory. When the plants have become a little story and all the earth must be gradually gathered auong the gradually gat them until the whole plat once more becomes a level. The plants will head with this mode of culture anite an of the plat at times, to be set in the old mode, and from one-fourth to two thirds of the plants have been destroyed, while not one in the trenches has been injured in the least. I had but little faith in the plan when first pointed out to me, but repeated experiments have satisfied me that it is an efficient one. I don't pretend to give the reason of the thing, though I am convinced of its efficacy. - Cultivator.

In the raising of Indian corn, some experiments have been made which have produced singular results. Mr. Fowle, of Ohio, planted one and a half acres of ground with three different kinds of corn-half aere of China, half aere of yellow gourd seed, half aere of white flint. The result of the crop corn from the china, fifty-six and a half from the white flint, and fifty-four from the vellow gourd seed. The richest banker on earth would vainly offer his fortune to be able to write a verse like Byron. One comes into the world naked, and goes out naked. The difference in the fineness of a bit of linen for a shroud is not much. We are now making use of Flour from this Mill, and can recommend it highly. If the public will make a trial of this four, perhaps they would find it advisable to deal at lome, instead of going abroad for it. Make the experiment.

THE WHEAT CROP.

At one time-three weeks ago-we almost despaired of the Wheat crop of this county; but we now take great pleasure in saying that the past two weeks of fine weather, has entirely dissipated our apprehensions on that score. While there are many farmers, however, who will not make their average crop, there are a large majority who will. Harvest will not be as early this year as last, by 10 days.
