THURSDAY MORNING.

APRIL 22, 1852.

THE WHIG STATE CONVENTION.

We had the pleasure, last week, of attending this convention of undaunted Whigs—all of whom seemed just as exuberant and as indubious in Whigdom at the time they had never suffered defeat.

They went to their work “with a will”—we don’t mean a “hot testimony,” but a disposition to make another gallant fight. There was some debate upon new resolutions, but 99 out of every 100 admitted that the Whigs of Virginia, and of the whole South were found to “stand by the man who had stood by them in the hour of peril.”

The resolutions indicating Mr. Faquier as the first choice in the Whig Platform of Virginia, and as a chief figure in the Whig State Convention of 1851, Fillmore should not be the mouthpiece of the National Convention, the successful candidate must be prepared to speak out in terms no less decided against Indians and slaves, and he is known to us in Virginia, where the Barnardites are still in the ascendant, to be the man of the other, will be allowed to keep up the slavery agitation—or whether we are to have some guarantee for quiet and security such as we now have under the Administration of President FILLMORE.

Benton and Fillmore, the contest in Virginia is by no means a desperate one for the Whigs—without staking our debt in the Governor’s election. Not only does every Whig in the State approve Mr. Fillmore’s cause, but there are thousands of Democrats who consider and sense of justice compel them to admit his merit. They have no fault to find, and would be by no means out of humor at his reelection.

There never has been a period since the Monroe era when honorable men were so ready to admit the desirability of a political opponent as at present.

GREAT FRESHET AT HARPERS-FERRY.

Our country has been visited by an awful calamity—the ablest inhabitants never before witnessed such rivers in the waters of the Potomac and Shenandoah—sudden, unexpected and overwhelming.

Immediately raining about 4 o’clock P. M., on Saturday last, and continued without intermission, until Tuesday night at noon, it filled, however, so that no one anticipated more than an ordinary swelling of the streams. On Monday, fearful foreboding began to be entertained by the now very striking inhabitants residing near the junction of the two rivers, but still there was no dread that the “high water-marks,” known for a century past, would become submerged—that the ever memorable freshet of 1847, would be a passing stream, compared with the angry, terrible and devouring deluge that was quickly to rush upon them, drive them from their fire-sides, and leave their habitations look afar like islands dotted over the sea. The gloom of thought or expectation like this, and consequently no extraordinary effort made to remove those household effects, even their food and garments, out of reach of the destructive element.

By Tuesday morning the streets of Harper’s Ferry, had been closed for mighty rivers, and the second and third stories and house-tops, resting places for its dire inhabitants.

Boats, gondolas and carts were brought into requisition to remove many families from their cherished homes to the neighboring hills, where they could behold, with frightened minds and sore hearts, their very earthly comfort lie a prey to the “unholy flood.” Who, unless his heart were made of stone could witness scenes like these and not shed tears of blood?

Persons were borne into eternity upon the troubled bosom of this inland ocean. Two families were heard at midnight, amid the roar of this wave of elements, crying for help, but before morning’s dawn their habitations were no more to be seen—having been carried away by the resistless current.

If there ever was a time when it should become the doom of Jefferson—the acknowledged garden spot of this good old Commonwealth—to give substantial proofs of their charity, of their plenitude and their humanity, in a word, of the practice of those noble traits of character which should be the character of human beings formed after the image of their Maker, then that time has come. When will He, whose all-embracing compassion reigns over these waves, reward them tenfold.

P. S.—The destruction of property, beyond all description, every house on Shenandoah and Potowmack was almost entirely submerged—the water being six feet higher than at any other period within the recollection of man. All the bridges, save one, the Winchester Rail Road from Shenandoah City, to the Ferry, together with the trestle-work, and a portion of the road is gone—also the bridge leading to Henry’s Mill. Great damage has also been done to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. Although the water was up to the Potowmack Bridge, yet it withstood the tide, and is safe.

The loss of property belonging to the U. S. Army, as well as to private citizens, cannot at present be estimated, but is very great. We will endeavor next week to give particulars.

We trust our Representatives in Congress will make an effort to procure an appropriation for the relief of the artisans of Harper’s Ferry. They are part and parcel of the government; and they should not be permitted to sustain the heavy losses with compensation.

MR. WEBSTER.

It is just as this distinguished statesman, in regard to Mr. Webster of the Alexandria Telegraph, terminally to agent as might have been expected, “steadily and firmly, expression of his fixed desire for abolition rights. If Compromise Measures positive movement to a let, that is not fishing the Compromise Measures, we shall all of all be satisfied.”

CITY HOTEL, RICHMOND.

See the account of this recent concern, in our columns, at our late visit to Richmond, with a full account of testing of its most excellent qualities. It is the property of the most obliging proprietors at that place.

MR. SCOTT OF JEFFERSON.

are indebted to S. Howland Brown for a new map of this County. We cannot commend too strongly this valuable work. It is gotten up in a style equal in finish, elegance and correctness to Mitchell’s Map of the United States, and nearly approaches it in dimensions. There is not a farm or farm-house, river, creek, run, railroad, turnpike or county road that is not named and accurately laid down. The plots of the towns and villages are beautifully and correctly drawn. In a word, it is perfect and satisfactory; as the labor of years could make it. We trust that every citizen of the country will at once secure a copy.

THE BATTLE!

We have no small or large fire-arms in our possession, but we have been honored, by the noble and with the present of a Rock Fish weighing over fifty pounds!

This gentleman has ever in prosperity and adversity, though good and evil reports, under all circumstances, when the opportunity offered, recommended the printer.

WHIG STATE CONVENTION.

Wednesday April 14—4 o’clock. The Whigs of each District in the Whig National Convention.

The substitute was adopted by Messrs. Maupin, Scott of Powhatan, Patrick and McFarlan, and opposed by Mr. Scott of Faquier, Hill Carter and Witcher. The discussion was an animated one. The vote was taken upon it by count, and the substitute was rejected—say 92, 81.

The resolution was then amended so as to appoint 3 delegates and 3 alternates from each Congressional District, and was passed.

The Convention then adjourned to 8 P. M.

The Convention re-assembled at 8 o’clock. The African Church was crowded by an immense multitude. The following resolutions were reported by Mr. Scott of Faquier, Chairman of the Committee of Resolutions, and adopted with entire unanimity and great enthusiasm:

The Whigs of Virginia in Convention assembled do resolve:

1st. That we regard the acts of Congress commonly known as the compromise as a final settlement and adjustment of the questions involved in them, and will consider any attempt to disturb them as a blow aimed at the peace of the country.

2d. That we approve the administration of President FILLMORE, believing that by his wisdom and skillful management of national affairs amidst embroiling difficulties, his loyalty to the Constitution, his firmness in the maintenance of the law, and his just regard for the rights of the South, has eminently fulfilled our expectations and justly entitled himself to our continued confidence and support.

3d. That the National Whig Convention, assembled by the National Whig Convention, at 8 o’clock P. M.
